Amazon’s new prime offer: Delivering six health clinics for 20,000 workers in D-FW

The deal: Amazon is delivering six health clinics for 20,000 workers in Dallas-Fort Worth, with plans for more, as part of a national program to improve health and cut costs.

The new clinics: Amazon is opening six health clinics for its workers in D-FW, one at its Austin headquarters, and another at its nearby park in Plano. The company also is building a health clinic in Austin for workers at its warehouse there, and another in Austin for workers at its headquarters.

The clinics will include medical and dental care, and Amazon will offer a range of services, including on-site doctors, nurses, and therapists. The company also will provide wellness programs and a range of mental health services, including counseling.

The deal is part of Amazon’s national Health Clinics program, which it began in 2016. The company said the program will help improve the health of its workers and cut costs.

The company said it expects to have 40 health clinics nationwide by the end of 2020, with 20,000 workers eligible to participate.

Amazon recently announced plans to expand its health clinics to 250,000 workers by the end of 2020.

Big companies with on-site clinics

Amazon is just one of several companies with on-site health clinics. Many companies are offering such programs to improve the health of their workers and cut costs.

NTX Health is a Dallas-based company that provides health services to several companies, including Amazon. The company also offers health services to employees at the company’s D-FW headquarters.

Other companies with on-site health clinics include:

- Bank of America
- Capital One
- JPMorgan Chase
- Nike
- Walmart

Why they invest in the clinics

Companies are investing in on-site health clinics to improve the health of their employees and cut costs.

On-site health clinics can help employees feel more comfortable seeking medical care and can help companies cut costs by reducing the need for expensive hospitals and other medical facilities.

In addition, on-site health clinics can help companies improve their reputation and attract more employees.

By offering health services on-site, companies can help their employees stay healthy and reduce their risk of missing work due to illness or injury.

Here’s the deal

Amazon is investing in on-site health clinics to improve the health of its workers and cut costs. The company is building six health clinics in D-FW, one in Austin, and another in Plano. The company also is building a health clinic in Austin for workers at its warehouse there, and another in Austin for workers at its headquarters.

The company said it expects to have 40 health clinics nationwide by the end of 2020, with 20,000 workers eligible to participate.

Amazon recently announced plans to expand its health clinics to 250,000 workers by the end of 2020.